courage and enterprise which deserve particular recog nition. A scheme of his for a sledge journey attracted a great deal of attention at the time. "I am inclined to think," says a letter from the ship, " that the plan of our executive officer, Lieut.-Commander Merriman, who was first to volunteer for any expedition to the worth in search of the Polaris, was a good one, but his services could not be spared from the thip. The expedition proposed by Mr. Merriman, was to take one of our whole boats capable of riding any sea, provided with runners on her bottom, the keel making a third runner, so as to sied her on the ice when deemed necessary. By this means she would be safe in all gales, as the crew could haul her upon the ice, and sled her to a place of safety, in addition to himself, there would be only Capt. Buddington, who is one of our ice pilots, and an old Artic whaler. There being but two persons, it would be necessary to have but a small store of provisions. They would be supplied with a boat stove, in which 160 pounds of fuel would hast them a week, and by which pounds of fuel would last them a week, and by which they would be able to melt lee and supply themselves with dirthking water as well as keep warm. The boat would be provided with sails, ears, water-tight tarpaulia, tackle, and an ice auchor to be used in having the boat upon the ice, which could be easily done with a light boat. All of the ropes used in working the sails would lead aft, so that it would require but one person to handle the boat while the assistant reated."

ELECTION AT PHICADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2.—This morning Judge Gordon, newly elected, assisted by other numbers of the Supreme Court, sat to hear argument of counsel upon the bill field for an injunction to restrain the Board of Election Commissioners, appointed by the Constitutional Consention ers, appointed by the Constitutional Commenters from conducting an etection Dec. 16, by means of sellicus manued by themselves independently of the officers appointed by the Board of Aldermee. It was arranged that Messas Gower, Ashurst, and Browster should speak for the complanants, and Messas Biddle, Armstrong, and Backalow for the respondents.

Mr. Gower presented an affidavit that a paper signed by 46 delegates demanding a separate vite by the people on the judiciary article, was submitted in the Convention. The argument then proceeded at great length.

THE CALIFORNIA SENATORSHIP. SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 2 .- The Legislature of this State will meet again to-day. The adjournment yesterday is considered a trick to give the Democrats and Republicaus time tocomple their plans against Booth and the Independents, whom he leads. It seems to be generally conceded that Booth with be elected for the long term and some Democrat for the short term, but who the latter will be has not been settled. There is a report that Mr. Casserly is working to defeat Booth, but it is not generally credited. There are nomerous rumors of bargains, compromises, and combi-nations among the friends of the candidates. ADJOURNED SESSION OF THE OHIO CONSTITUTIONAL

THE VILLE DU HAVRE.

FURTHER ACCOUNTS OF THE WRECK. OSPITABLE RECEPTION OF THE SURVIVORS IN LON-DON-THE LOCH EARN UNABLE TO RENDER IM-MEDIATE ASSISTANCE - DESTITUTION OF THE SURVIVORS-SAGACITY OF THE ENGINEER.

LONDON, Tuesday, Dec. 2, 1873. Eleven of the survivors from the Ville du Havre leparted for Paris to-night. The railway company kindly provided a saloon car for them. During their short stay in London everybody vied with each other in comforting the survivors. Marks of affection were evinced; the storekeepers refused to accept payment. These offers were resisted with difficulty. The steamer's agents provided funds, while Morgan Brown and others offered a home. All this was unnecessary, as several of the surviving gentlemea saved a sufficiency of funds. Mr. Bishop had £300 in English notes and gold. It is a remarkable fact that several others seemingly had ample time to dress completely. Bishop's watch stopped at 2:28. Cramer's watch stopped exactly at 21. This leads to a supposition that much valuable time was lost in lowering the boats, owing to the utter absence of discipline after the collision. No orders were given. The officers were distracted. Each helped himself. This fact is undisputed. The longboat contained no first-class passengers. Sailors and coal, boys rushed and took possession, all rescues being effected subsequently. The Scotch ship was prevented from preparing immediately for the rescue from its ignorance as to whether serious damage was done to the steamer, which arose probably from inability to communicate in French, consequently the Loch Earn's boats were not lowered until the steamer had gone down. No life-preserver was in its proper place. One gentleman, searching vainly through four cabins, ascertained that the occupants of three or four cabins in the midships were probably killed when the Scotchman struck the Ville du Havre. The most of those rescued had been floating from half an hour to an hour before they were picked up. The Scotchman had little comfort to extend to the rescued beyond open hearts and good will. The ladies changed | their dreuched night-dresses for sailors clothing. It soon, however became a question whether the Loch Earn offered safety to those on board. Capt. Surmont declared his determination to transfer the crew to some other ship, when possible, leaving the passengers behind. This was resisted by the mate and Belknap, and after consultation with the earpenter, they overcame, with some difficulty, Surmont's opposition, when the Trimountain was sighted. A transfer was effected, and the American captain, who is married, offered the ladies increased comfort in the neat cabin, occupied by his wife. Still when a landing was effected at Cardiff, at twilight on Monday, the ladies were in a state of semi-undity, some having only blankets to protect them, no bonnets, and their feet covered with sailors' stockings. They arrived at the hotel, when the agents immediately provided clothing. All the ladies assembled in the parlor, having short notice to dress prior to their departure for London When the signal was given, the gentlemen asked whether they were ready, and the door was opened, when all realized the fearful tragedy, all the ladies being clad in mourning. The heroism of the ladies was beyond all praise, that of Miss Hunter being especially conspicuous. All gratefully acknowlege the motherly care with which they were treated. At the time of the collision the second officer was in charge of the ship. He perished. The sailor on the tookout was rescued. He maintains that ten minutes prior to the catastrophe he reported to the officer in charge, and that the latter gave confused directions to the man at the wheel.

The few saved owe their lives to the sagacity of the engineer, who stopped the engines in time, thus preventing further loss of life by shortening the listance between the vessels.

A Scotchman on the steamer was the among the crew who knew English. The remainder were French. The steamer was steering E. S. E. starboard tack, taking off two points prior to striking. The Scotch vessel was running three points free port tack. The weather was clear and stars were shining. The ship studding all sails, except sails. Two hours later the sea was roughish. A court of inquiry was opened at Cardiff. Capt. Surmont blames the officer in charge. There are ne signs of the Loch Earn.
Pages, Tuesday, Dec. 2, 1873.

The detailed account given by the survivors is ated from his sister in the vortex caused by the sinking ship. Miss Beeden left the wreck hand in hand with her father. The latter was drowned. Mr. Bishop had secured two planks, and gave one to his friend Mr. Taylor, who was drowned. The former narrowly escaped. A sailor attacked him, but he left his plank and swam for McCloskey Butt, a lad of 17 years, says he was roused from sleep. He rushed on deck and found nearly everybody praying. Mrs. Buckley prayed aloud. It seemed like inspiration. Judge Peckham was standing near his wife, encouraging her and sayiog: "If we go down, let us go bravely." Butt observed Mrs. Murray, Mrs. Platt, and Mrs. Kennett. The latter had her infant, a favorite with all the passengers. She handed it to the nurse while fetching the second child. Before she was able to return the ship went down. Butt thinks he floated twenty minutes on a spar.

Many were prevented from swimming by their overcoats.

Capt. Surmont remains at Cardiff, prostrated. All attribute the blame to want of discipline.

WHEN THE LOCH EARN WAS SIGHTED.

LONDON, Wednesday, Dec. 3, 187 Later details of the wreck of the Ville du Havre eport that the Loch Earn was sighted by those on board the steamer from 15 to 17 minutes before the collision occurred.

CRITICISM ON SHORE.

THEORIES AS TO THE CAUSE OF THE DISASTEE. The question of responsibility for the collision was eagerly discussed in insurance circles yester-day. An officer of one of the largest of the marine insurance companies said he could not ac-count for the collision if as was stated the weather was clear. It was true that, as a general thing-sailing vessels had the right of way, but they were expected to exercise all needed precautions. In this case it would seem that the Loch Earn struck the steamer full on" and about amidships. He could not see why the vessel could not have luffed up and passes astern of the steamer. The failure to do so would seem to imply that a good look out was not kept. Still, he could not say what might be the explanation of the officer in command of the deck at the time. He was apprehenfor the safety of the Loch Earn. She s an iron vessel, and the accounts already received show that she was in a damaged condition. She should have made Queenstown before this if, as stated, the captain concluded to put back. The captain of the Lock Earn may not have deemed his vessel so badly damaged and unseaworthy as she subsequently proved An iron vessel was worse in some respects than a wooden one. In a case of this kind the bolts may have been badly started and the scams strained, and yet these defects would not have been apparent until the vessel was put before the wind. The extra strain to which she would then be subjected would open the seatos, and cause a leak the pumps would be powerless to overcome. The col-lision will be fully investigated by the French Government, and an opportunity will then be afforded for both sides to be heard and the truth ascertained. Until then criticism would be out of place.

gave the following theory of the collision : He believed that on sighting each other the Havre had ported her helm hard to get out of the way of the Loch Earn, and the collision would have been avoided had the Loch Earn also ported her helm. As she did not, she struck the Havre evidently on the portside, and, according to the dispatches, amidships. the theory of a heavy fog prevailing has been set aside by other statements in the dispatches, such as that of a high wind blowing and that of one of the survivors, who swam nearly a mile to the boat, which are directly opposed to any such theory of a fog, he concluded that the nightiwas at the utmost only dark and stormy. Lights ought therefore to have been visible on the Loch Earn, and there is no evidence that any lights were displayed , or at least properly displayed. If there had been a man at the lookeut, he would have seen the lights, unless he was sheltering himself from the weather abaft the foru-

As all accounts seem to agree that the steamer was struck amidships, and that the jibboom of the ship placed far into the heart of the steamer, crushing immense sheets of iron to a depth of 30 feet inward, it may be of terrible interest to know who were the lumates of the staterooms thus rudely and unexpectedly assailed. The rooms that may be claimed to be amidships number from 54 to 100, and those on the port side, which, according to Capt, Johnson's theory, was the side struck, were occupied by Capt. Hunter and his family, two of whom were saved, F. Lelado, and Butt, who was saved, and Mrs. Ferdinand and child, Mrs. Goodwin and child, Mrs. Kennet and her child, Trefousse, and the Sigourney family, who were all lost. On the same side, but a tier lower in the second-class cabin, were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Creste, who were both saved, and Lafargue and M. Laures, who were both lost. In the corre sponding rooms of the first-class cabin on the starboard side were the Swifts, Mrs. Platt. Miss Murray, Mr. Murray, Mr. Squadrille, Geo. H. Taylor, and James Bishop. Of these, the Swifts, Benbanson, and Bishop were the only ones saued. There were no passengers in the second class on the starboard side.

SKETCHES OF THE PASSENGERS. AN ADDITIONAL VICTIM.

Among the passengers whose names do not appear on this list at the Compan's office, was Jacob Grossobal, age 31, a member of the firm of Simonet Grosobel was on his way to France to attend to some family matters. He went on board of the steamer a short time before she sailed, and paid his passage-money to the purser. Mr. Sirmont saw him on board the steamer, and waited until she sailed to bid hiv good by. His name does not appear on the hat of the saved. Mr. Gossobel was a native of Peland, but came to this country when quite young. He leaves a wife and four young children.

Mrs. A. G. Kennett, who was mentioned yesterday was on her way to Marseilles to join her husband, the licutenant-commander and navigating officer of the sloop-of-war Alaska, attached to the Mediterraneau squadren off Cartagena. She left Buffalo on November , with her mother and younger sister, taking her two children, one a girl of 19 months and the other a remarkbly interesting boy of 22 years. The party were acco panied to this "v by Capt. Ralph Chandler and w"o of the Brooklyn brother of Mrs. Kennett met them at the depot and escorted them to the Sturtevant House to await the sailing of the ill-fated vessel. Her colored nurse refused at the last moment to accompany her, and Mrs. Kennett was obliged to engage a Freuch nurse ustend. Mrs. Kennett's loss caused profound among her many friends at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, and great sympathy is expressed by the officers their comrade thus so suddenly bareaved. Lieut.-Com mander Kennett's father died in Paris early last Spring. Mrs. Coles, the wife of Lieut. Coles of the Alaska, was intending to accompany Mrs. Kennett to Marseilles to oin her husband, but for some cause did not take pasage on the Ville du Havre. Mrs. Coles is a daughter of enater Thurman of Ohio.

Mr. Waite of the Brevoorl House, it will be rement bered, had a son and daughter on the ill-fated steamer, and the daughter was lost. He received yesterday afternoon the following cable disputch from London: "Weeping with you. Charles very well. Weldon." This was from the Rev. George W. Weidon of the Church of St. Savior, London, a persona friend of the family. He was a guest of the Brevoort House during the recent session of the Evange Alliance in this city. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Waite, who is an invalid and went abroad for his realth, is being cared for in the family of the Rev. Mr. Welden, at London.

A. B. McCreery, who was among the saved, is a brother of James McCreery, the dry goods merchant of this city. He was on his way to his home in the north of Ireland A TRIBUNE reporter called on the Rev. Father Quinn, in Mulberry-st., in the hope of obtaining some information concerning the Rev. M. Simond, spoken of in Tin Tanutsa of yesterday as being a young Roman Catholic student of divinity; but the Rev. Father consulted the usual seconds in vain for the name. Nor could be give any information concerning the Chiholic priest who was said to have given absolution to one or more as the vessel was sinking beneath the waves,

INOURIES OF FRIENDS. STATEMENTS OF THE COMPANY'S AGENTS.

The interest in the disaster to the Ville du Havre was not centered about the office of the steamship company in this city yesterday, so fully as it was on the previous day. Friends of passengers on board the few who applied yesterday at the Company's office, No. 58 Broadway, were only those who hoped against hope, or were doubtful of good news unless it were confirmed over and over again. A number of persons who had been noticed listlessly awaiting any news that might be received on Monday, were seen in their old places yesterday, eagerly bending forward to hear the conversation of the agents, or pressing forward ocatch the purport of my new dispatch, as the messenger delivered it. One gentleman presented himself very excitedly and said that Mr. Montague had been saved, and that Caylas, Dernyter & Co. had received a dispatch to that effect, but on further inquiry he said he had not seen it, and the firm denied that any such dispatch had been received. Mr. Montague had seen deputed by the French citizens of this city to present to M. Thiers a magnificent album, filled with testimonials of their regard for his virtue and etatesmanship, and arrangements, were to have been made soon after his arrival for its formal presentation. The album had fortunately been retained on this side, in order that minor details could be finished, and it is Another gentleman inquired for his nephew, young McCoskey Butt, whose name had been spelled unintelligibly among the saved in the earlier telegrams. He still seemed uncertain of the lad's fate, and was rendered even more so by the information which the books elicited that the room-mate of the young man was Mr. Trefousse, who was lost. The gentleman had telegraphed to young Butt at Cardiff and had received no reply. He had also telegraphed to the mother, Mrs. Delpratt, who resides at Paris, but he had eccived no reply from her. The fact that her son had sailed in the Ville du Havre had been concealed from the mother to save her any uneasiness during the voyage and he felt that it was now a very delicate matter to explain everything to her. Besides, he feared that the boy might have been badly injured in the crash although he was saved, and consequently might be helpless. He was assured by Mr. Fulten, the passenger agent, that the boy would be well cared for by the Company's agents at Cardiff, and sent forward at once to Paris. He would lack neither money nor friends, as the Company were bound by humanity to carry the passengers to their destination and to minister to all their wants. It was probable that the mother and son were on the way to each other, an ! thus had failed to receive the dispatches. The mother would hear the news through the dispatches from London to Paris. The gentleman departed somewhat more easy in mind. A friend of Trefousse, the lost room-mate of the lad Butt, came in soon after, and said that Trefousse had been in this country some months and was auxious to return home. He had delayed his departure, however, four or five weeks, and had finally concluded to embark on the atal vessei. "As the ship steamed out of her dock," said the friend, "he waved his hand toward me lightly and said, 'Farewell! You'll never see me in this A dispatch was received from Rochester, New-York, signed "Joseph Mosca," asking If Sebastian Mosca was The agent replied that he was not reported among those saved. The agent said that he still clung to the hope that the Loch Earn has kept some of the passengers abourd, and that they would yet be heard

The officers of the Company have forwarded by mail the passenger and cargo lists of the vessel as well as all the official papers connected with her last voyage, in view of the investigation of the disaster which they believe the French Government will order on the arrival of the officers in Paris. He thought Capt. Surmont would himself request an examination to relieve himself of any impulation of neglect of duty and to put the blame of the collision wherever it belonged. The agents did not doubt for a moment that Capt, Surmont would not only be acquitted but most probably commended for his coolness and gallantry under the circumstaness. Ho was a thoroughly brave and vigilant officer. Hes duty lay, and it was a fixed custom with him to sleep only in the daytime during the voyage. Whether the night was clear or foggy, stormy or mild, he steadily paced his bridge or made his tour of inspection until day, never lying down even for a moment on his couch. The French Government were usually very rigid in their investigations, and were equally ready to impose blame or praise. Two years ago Capt. Duchesne's conduct was made the sub-ject of inquiry by one of the French commissions for an accident which had happened to the Pereire, by which nearly all the fore part of her cabins had carried away; but the evidence was so conclusive of the captain's vigilance and bravery in the matter that the Commission highly complimented him, and as he had already received the Cross of the Legion of Honor, for similar gallantry, they made him a commander of the

THE INSURANCES. The Ville du Havre was insured in French ompanies for about two-thirds her value. This would be about $1,000,000. The names of the compa-nies and the respective amounts in each are not known to Mr. McKenzie, the agent of company in this city. The cargo is valued at from $275,000 to $300,000. The officers of the various marine insurance companies in this city claim that the insurance on the cargo is very light, but decline Lloyds stated that his Company had not a single risk. Others gave as a reason for the small amount of insur ance on the enrgo that the line had been so free from disasters that those who shipped by it had become careless in of insurance, although the rates were low at the present time, when so many persons had shipments on board, it was urged it would be a difficult matter to give each individual insurance for publication, even if it sere not contrary to the rules of the companies to do so,

THE CHARGES AGAINST WM. LESLIE-ACTION OF THE TRUSTEES OF MORRISANIA.

The Board of Trustees of the town of Westchester met in special session last evening in the Town Hall, and the proceedings appeared to excite a great deal of interest. Fully half an hear before the meeting began, every seat outside the railing was occupied, and a large number of persons were also compelled to stand in the passageways and about the entrance. Precisely at 8 o'clock, Senator Wm. Cauldwell, the presiding officer, called the meeting to order, and when othe clerk read the names of the trustees, it was found that Messrs. Leslie and Santos were absent. Mr. Santos then took his seat. James Rowen of the Special Committee presented a report to the following effect: After alluding to the fact that the Committee

After aliuding to the fact that the Committee had given careful attention to the charges of John T. Hunt against William Leadie, and the counter-charges relative to the Oue-hundred-and-forty-fifth-st. grading, the Iong-standing trouble between the Board and the contractor, the pains to to prevent fraud, the report says "it is a matter of deep mortification, that through perhaps, too much carelessness on the one part, and the partisanship of a member of the Board on the other part, the contractor was overpaid, though it is some satisfaction to know that the engineer or engineers cheated himself or themselves out of $1,000 which had been intended should have been paid to thou. The report then gives in detail the records in the minute-book of the proceedings of the Board relating to the proceedings for the grading One-hundred-and-forty-fifth-st., from Jan. 23, 1873, to Sept. II, 1873, when the assessment rolls was grading One-hundred-and-forty-lifth-st., from Jan. 23, 1873, to Sept. 17, 1873, when the assessment rolls was adopted by a vote of 7 to 1. Mr. Leslie alone voting in the negative. During the controversy the work of the contractor was reduced by the Logal Committee, assisted by the engineer, from $17,124.75 to $14,222.50; but subsequently an additional allowance of $1,386.50 was granted, making the total $15,619 for work of grading One-hundred-and-Porty-fifth-st. On this amount the assessment roll was made out. While this was going on, Patrick Handhode, the original contractor, assigned his contract to Mr. Michael Donoline.

The Sheriff has begun preparations for the execution. He has requested two companies of the 4th Regiment and empany B of the 1st Battalion to report for duty at the County Court-house on Friday at 8 a. m. for the prisoner anneanced his fate to him Monday night, and was received with onths and insulting language, the prisoner repeatedly requesting him to go away. After his counsel left him he appeared to realiza quently heard to nauter. "No one man lang me." The Sound received a number of applications for admission to the lati-yard on the day of the execution, but has thus far refused to grant then. The Sheris has made arrangements to have a gullow brought from New-York. He had an interview with Sheris Bueznan yesterday, and received permission from him to take over the xullows usually used at the Tombs. The same rope and pulsey will be used as was used in the late executions in the Tombs. The carpenters will commence this morning to build a fence around that portion of the jull-yard to be used.
